

Breastfed Babies and Vaccines

Vaccines Are Very Important To Your Baby's Health

- Breastfeeding can enhance your baby's response to certain immunizations, providing more protection.
- Breastfeeding passes many immune factors to baby; however, breastfeeding should not be considered a substitute for immunization.
- Breastfeeding while the vaccine is given to your baby – or immediately afterward – can help relieve pain and soothe an upset baby.
- Babies who are exclusively breastfed are less likely to run fevers after their routine immunizations than babies who are partially breastfed or only receive formula.
- You can receive most vaccines when breastfeeding, consult your healthcare provider.
